Abstract

"Bukolisch" was born out of a fascination with the painted wardrobes found in the Tyrolean region. These pieces of furniture are characterized by their bucolic painting and are considered a part of folk art. Today, the term carries a sense of nostalgia for pre-industrial society.

The concept behind "Bukolisch" is to use industrial materials and apply new glass painting techniques to recreate the typical vernacular look of everyday objects. The illustrations are variations of a repeated form inspired by the traditional decorations on the cabinets of Arte Veneziana (producer of the cabinet). Depending on their position, the decorations take on different meanings. All of these meanings dreamily recall the same ornamental nature of the original pieces.
